NAB FARMER IN ALKY ROUNDUP

John Waldvogel, Frankfort Farmer Arrested by Federal Agents Wed; Out on Bonds

Last Wednesday night when the Federal Prohibition Agents raided the big alky still on the John Waldvogel farm east of Frankfort, they also arrested John Waldvogel on whose farm the still was in operation and locked him up in Chicago. Later he was let out on a $1000 bond. He is to be given a hearing in the Federal Building, Chicago Friday. This makes the second time he has been in trouble with the government. Last winter when the still was raided for the first time, Waldvogel also was tangled up in the mess but managed to get out of the scrape. It was understood then that he had rented his barn for $200 a month to the moonshine gang. When the still was raided for the second time several weeks ago by States Attorney Rehn of Will County, Waldvogel pleaded being ignorant of the still in his barn. People must be feeble minded if they believe that a man will rent a building on his farm at a high rental and not know for what purpose it is being used.

According to Attorney A. H. Krusemark who is representing Waldvogel, the later has told him that after the raid by Rehn he told the moonshiners they would have to vacate his barn, but as they had a lease on the place up to August first they refused to move and in the meantime the Federal Agents raided the still and got him (Waldvogel).

Barlewort Victim Of Circumstances

Herman Barlewort in a statement to the News-Bulletin claims that he has been the victim of circumstances regarding the house of ill fame which opened recently in the house on the old Peter Scheer farm. Mr. Barlewort says he would not knowingly rent any property to a bunch of law breakers. According to Mr. Barlewort's story he rented the farm from George J. Hacker of Mokena. As Mr. Barlewort had no use for the farm house and front yard he decided to rent it. A man giving his name as Wm. Rath of Joliet and said to be connected with the plasterers union of that city rented the farm house and yard of Mr. Barlewort for six months and paid him $70 rent in advance. He lived on the place about a month and then vacated the place. Immediately afterward the disorderly house opened up in this farm house and Mr. Barlewort was told about it but as he had rented the place to the Joliet man he did not feel he had any jurisdiction in the matter. A short time later the place was raided by deputies from the sheriff's office and four women and two men were arrested and plead guilty to the charge of being inmates of a disorderly house and were fined but immediately afterward are said to have started operations again. Mr. Barlewort denies that the house of ill fame was in operation on the Fourth of July for the Rath family was living there at the time he says, but just a few days afterward the disorderly house opened in this place. Mr. Barlewort says he is not guilty of taking blood money and that he has been made the fall guy in the unsavory affair.

Fund Growing

The fund for the Mokena fire motor truck is growing steadily. Elmer L. Cooper who is handling the subscription list had reported a total of $925 up to the time of going to press and hopes to reach the $1000 mark by the end of this week. The truck is to cost $2600.

Matteson Will Celebrate I. C. Electrification

On August 7th the Illinois Central railroad will inaugurate the electric suburban service. About 3 trains with about 12 cars each will start at Matteson about 11:30 a. m. The I. C. officials expect to come to Matteson by steam and go on board the electric trains. The municipality officials and other citizens between Matteson and Chicago will be picked up and will be the guests of the company on this first trip which will then inaugurate the electric suburban service. The Matteson citizens expect to take part in this celebration. The business men will close their places of business during the noon hour. Ashler's band will furnish the music for the occasion; the school children will give a demonstration; the salute will be given by shooting fireworks. Everyone in the vicinity should be at Matteson to see the electric service and see the first steam road in Cook County change from steam to electricity. Do not forget the date August 7th at 11:30 a. m., daylight saving time.

Citizens Object to Mokena Paving

Next Wednesday the new Board of Local Improvements will hold their first meeting at the village hall at 7:30 p. m., to consider the necessary steps to take regarding the concrete paving of all streets in Mokena with the exception of Front street, the main thoroughfare. The property owners are much opposed to the proposed paving on the ground that the cost of the paving and the interest on the special assessments will bring the cost up high and if the Front street has to be re-built the taxes will be unbearable. Many property holders can not afford to pay a special assessment of $50 a year beside the interest, taxes, etc., which would mean an outlay of nearly $100 per year. It is felt that property values will not increase so rapidly as offset the cost of the proposed paving.

It is up to the property holders of the village to file objections if they do not want to bear a big tax burden for the next ten years.

EDITORIAL

That the right kind and decent people of Frankfort township are backing up the News-Bulletin in its fight for law enforcement in Frankfort township was vividly demonstrated by the many expressions of commendation received by personal talks, by telephone and by mail. Following is one of the outstanding expressions of commendations received:

"Editor News-Bulletin, Mokena, Illinois.

Dear Sir:— I wish to heartily commend you for the stand you are taking for law and order in Frankfort township and assure you of my loyal support. When officials responsible for law enforcement, permit such places as the road house, the Waldvogel still and house of ill fame to re-open, there is a reason for it which should bring a blush of shame to their cheeks.

Yours truly, WILLARD C. OWEN

The editor is highly pleased to know that there are men in this community who stand for the right and decency.

If these sink holes of iniquity are condoned it will be only a short time before Frankfort will be a town of Frankfort of lawlessness."

Rev. Stover Will Speak at Mokena And Tinley Sun.

Next Sunday the Methodist churches at Tinley Park and Mokena are to have a very rare treat in hearing Rev. J. E. Stover, Singer-Speaker-Traveler. He will be at the Eleven o'clock Worship Service at Tinley Park; at night he will both sing and speak at the Mokena 7:30 o'clock evening Worship Service.

Mr. Stover was born in India and lived there for the first 15 years of his life. His father was a missionary to that great multitude of people for thirty years. Mr. Stover is finishing his education in this country to return as a missionary to his birthplace. At present he is head of the music department at Mt. Morris College, which is sponsored by the Church of the Brethren, to which church Mr. Stover owes his affiliations.

This singer, student, traveller and speaker, will have the major part of both services. He will bring several vocal selections, and will speak on "The Missionary Situation in India and other Countries." At this time of interest in international affairs, we should profit much knowledge from these services. All people are urged to attend these services and all others, according to Glen T. Beaty, Pastor.

'49er Stops off At Mokena

Dan Maue of Minnesota who is driving Ezra Meeker, 96 years old, across continent in an auto from New York to Vancouver, stopped over night at the Edward J. Maue farm near Mokena last week. Mr. Meeker is going over the Oregon trail route which he made with ox teams in '49. He has made this trip several times since by auto, and aeroplane. Mr. Meeker is backed up by an eastern committee of which Chauncey DePew, famous New Yorker is also a member, to erect memorials of notable events along the Oregon trail route.

The government has been interested in the matter and has had a million fifty-cent pieces coined with the Oregon Trail emblem, which are being sold at $2.50 each. The money thus raised will be used to pay for the memorials to be erected.

Mr. Maue who has the distinction of driving cross country with Mr.

second Cicero with gunmen and thugs. Then no one would be safe. Something is radically wrong when a still has to be raided three times within a year. The question naturally arises "Is money being paid for protection and who to?"

The disorderly house case raises another question. Mr. Barlewort in his statement published elsewhere on this page says he rented the property used by the house of ill fame to a Joliet man for a summer home. The question that now arises is "Who rented or gave their permission to the disorderly house runners to move into this place"; also "why were they not raided at once when they started up after the first raid?" We would like to have the proper answers to these questions. Rumor says another reputable house is or has already opened near Mokena. Just where we do not know. Wake up folks and don't let the denizens of the underworld catch you sleeping!

The News-Bulletin stands foursquare every day in the year for Law Enforcement, Right, Truth and Justice in every community.

Let our slogan be "Clean up a town of Frankfort of lawlessness."

Meeker in this interesting enterprise, has only recently returned from Europe, the trip being a prize won in journalism last year.

Will Re-Appraise Fuchs Estate

Several months ago a board of three appraisers was appointed to appraise the property of the late Julius Fuchs of Mokena and to fix his widow's award, which they set at $1800. Fred Fox, son of the late Mr. Fuchs and only child, objected to this and thru his attorney, A. H. Krusemark filed an objection that the widow's award was excessive. On Tuesday the case came up in the court of Judge Fred Adams, and the court sustained the objection. New appraisers will be appointed and the property will be re-appraised. Mrs. Fuchs has also been asked to give an accounting for the $250 in cash money belonging to the estate, which was on hand at the time of the death of Mr. Fuchs.

Attorney A. H. Krusemark, represents the estate and Savage and Downey represent Mrs. Fuchs.

THE BEAVER

Synopsis.—Part wolf, part dog—when two months old Baree has his first meeting with an enemy, Papayuchisee (young owl). Fighting hard, the antagonists are suddenly plunged into a swollen creek. Badly buffeted, and half drowned, Baree is finally flung on the bank, but the water has destroyed his sense of direction and he is lost, lonely and hungry. For many days his life is one of fear and distress. He meets various creatures of the wild and goes through a thunderstorm. He is learning more and more. He strays into the trapping grounds of Pierrot and Nepeese. Nepeese wounds Baree with a rifle, but he escapes. Baree discovers and learns nature's secrets rapidly. Nepeese is determined to catch Baree and tame him and tries again. Baree is strongly drawn to the girl, but still fears man.

Chapter V

Impelled by the wild alarm of the Willow's terrible cries and the sight of Pierrot dashing madly toward him from the dead body of Wakayoo, Baree did not stop running until it seemed as though his lungs could not draw another breath. When he stopped he was well out of the canyon and headed for the beaver pond.

Exactly wherein lay Baree's fears it would be difficult to say—but surely it was not because of Nepeese. The Willow had chased him hard. She had flung herself upon him. He had felt the clutch of her hands and the smother of her soft hair, and yet of her he was not afraid! If he stopped now and then in his flight and looked back, it was to see if Nepeese was following. He would not have run hard from her—alone. Her eyes and voice and hands had something stirring in him; he was awed with a greater yearning and a greater loneliness now—and that he dreamed troubled dreams.

Baree was glad when the dawn came. He did not seek for food, but went down to the pond. There was little hope and anticipation in his manner now. He remembered that, as plainly as animal ways could talk, Umisk and his playmates had told him they wanted nothing to do with him. And yet the fact that they were there took away some of his loneliness. It was more than loneliness. The wolf in him was submerged. The dog was master. And in these passing moments, when the blood of the wild was almost dormant in him, he was depressed by the instinctive and growing feeling that he was not of that wild, but a fugitive in it, menaced on all sides by strange dangers.

Deep in the northern forests the beaver does not work and play in darkness only, but uses day even more than night, and many of Beaver-tooth's people were awake when Baree began disconsolately to investigate the shores of the pond. He did not try to hide himself now, and at least half a dozen beavers had a good look at him before he came to the point where the pond narrowed down to the width of the stream, almost half a mile from the dam. Then he wandered back. At that morning he hovered about the pond, showing himself openly.

In their big mud-and-stick strongholds the beavers held a council of war. They were distinctly puzzled. There were four enemies which they dreaded above all others: The otter, who destroyed their dams in the winter time and brought death to them from cold and by lowering the water so they could not get to their food supplies; the lynx, who preyed on them all, young and old alike; and the fox and wolf, who would lie in ambush for hours in order to pounce on the very young, like Umisk and his playmates. If Baree had been any one of these four, wily Beaver-tooth and his people would have known what to do. But Baree was surely not an otter, and if he was a fox or a wolf or a lynx, his actions were very strange, to say the least. Half a dozen times he had the opportunity to pounce on his prey, if he had been seeking prey. But at no time had he shown the desire to harm them.

It may be that the beavers discussed the matter fully among themselves. It is possible that Umisk and his playmates told their parents of their adventure and of how Baree made no move to harm them when he could quite easily have caught them. However this may be, courageous old Beaver-tooth took it upon himself to end the suspense.

It was early in the afternoon that for the third or fourth time Baree walked out on the dam. This dam was fully two hundred feet in length, but at no point did the water run over it, the overflow finding its way through narrow sluices. A week or two ago Baree could have crossed to the opposite side of the pond on this dam, but now—at the far end—Beaver-tooth and his engineers were adding a new section of dam, and in order to accomplish their work more easily they had flooded fully fifty yards of the low ground on which they were working. The dam held a fascination for Baree. The top of it was high and dry, and there were dozens of smoothly worn little hollows in which the beavers had taken their sun-baths. In one of these hollows Baree stretched himself out, with his eyes on the pond. Not a ripple stirred its velvety smoothness. Not a sound broke the drowsy stillness of the afternoon. The beavers might have been dead or asleep, for all the stir they made. And yet they knew that Baree was on the dam. Where he lay the sun fell in a warm flood, and it was so comfortable that after a time he had difficulty in keeping his eyes open to watch the pond. Then he fell asleep.

Just how Beaver-tooth sensed this fact is a mystery. Five minutes later he came up quietly, without a splash or a sound, within fifty yards of Baree. For a few moments he scarcely moved in the water. Then he swam very slowly parallel with the dam across the pond. At the other side he drew himself ashore and for another minute sat as motionless as a stone, with his eyes on that part of the dam where Baree was lying. Not another beaver was moving, and it was very soon apparent that Beaver-tooth had but one object in mind—getting a closer observation of Baree. When he entered the water again, he swam along close to the dam. Ten feet beyond Baree he began to climb out. He did this with great slowness and caution. At last he reached the top of the dam.

A few yards away Baree was almost hidden in his hollow, only the top of his shiny black body appearing to Beaver-tooth's scrutiny. To get a better look, the old beaver spread his flat tail out beyond him and rose to a sitting posture on his hind quarters, his two front paws held squirrel-like over his breast. In this pose he was fully three feet tall. He probably weighed forty pounds, and in some ways he resembled one of those fat, good-natured, silly-looking dogs that go largely to stomach. But his brain was working with amazing celerity. Suddenly he gave the hard mud of the dam a single slap with his tail—and Baree sat up. Instantly he saw Beaver-tooth, and stared. Beaver-tooth stared. For a full half-minute neither moved the thousandth part of an inch. Then Baree stood up and wagged his tail.

That was enough. Dropping to his forefeet, Beaver-tooth waddled leisurely to the edge of the dam and dived over. He was neither cautious nor in very great haste now. He made a great commotion in the water and swam boldly back and forth under Baree. When he had done this several times he cut straight up the pond to the largest of the three houses and disappeared. Five minutes after Beaver-tooth's exploit word was passing quickly among the colony. The stranger—Baree—was not a lynx. He was not a fox. He was not a wolf. Moreover, he was very young—and harmless. Work could be resumed. Play could be resumed. There was no danger. Such was Beaver-tooth's verdict.

If some one had shouted these facts in beaver language through a megaphone the response could not have been quicker. All at once it seemed to Baree, who was still standing on the edge of the dam, that the pond was alive with beavers. He had never seen so many at one time before. They were popping up everywhere, and some of them swam up within a dozen feet of him and looked him over in a leisurely and curious way. For perhaps five minutes they seemed to have no particular object in view. Then Beaver-tooth himself struck straight for the shore and climbed out. Others followed him. Half a dozen workers disappeared in the canals. As many more waddled out among the alders and willows. Eagerly Baree watched for Umisk and his chums. At last he saw them, swimming forth from one of the smaller houses. They climbed out on their playground—the smooth bar above the shore of mud. Baree wagged his tail so hard that his whole body shook, and hurried along the dam.

When he came out on the level strip of shore, Umisk was there alone, nibbling supper from a long, freshly cut willow. The other little beavers had gone into a thick clump of young alders.

This time Umisk did not run. He looked up from his stick. Baree squatted himself, wiggling in a most friendly and ingratiating manner. For a few seconds Umisk regarded him.

Then, very coolly, he resumed his supper.

Just as in the life of every man there is one big, controlling influence, either for good or for bad, so in the life of Baree the beaver pond was largely an arbiter of destiny. Where he might have gone if he had not discovered it, and what might have happened to him, are matters of conjecture. But it held him. It began to take the place of the old windfall, and in the beavers themselves he found a companionship which made up, in a way, for the loss of the protection and friendship of Kazan and Gray Wolf.

This companionship, if it could be called that, went just so far and no farther. With each day that passed the older beavers became more accustomed to seeing Baree. At the end of two weeks, if Baree had gone away, they would have missed him—but not in the same way that Baree would have missed the beavers. It was a matter of good-natured toleration on their part. With Baree it was different. He was still unsatisfied, as Nepeese would have said; he still wanted mothering; he was still moved by the puppyish yearnings which he had not yet had the time to outgrow; and when night came—to speak that yearning quite plainly—he had the desire to go into the big beaver house with Umisk and his chums, and sleep.

During the fortnight that followed Beaver-tooth's exploit on the dam Baree ate his meals a mile up the creek, where there were plenty of crawfish. But the pond was home. Night always found him there, and a large part of his day. He slept at the end of the dam, or on top of it on particularly clear nights, and the beavers accepted him as a permanent guest. They worked in his presence as if he did not exist.

He still could not induce Umisk and the other young beavers to join him in play, and after the first week or so he gave up his efforts. In fact, their play puzzled him almost as much as the dam-building operations of the older beavers. Umisk, for instance, was fond of playing in the mud at the edge of the pond. He was like a very small boy. Where his elders floated timbers from three inches to a foot in diameter to the big dam, Umisk brought small sticks and twigs no larger around than a lead pencil to his playground, and built a make-believe dam of his own.

Umisk would work an hour at a time on this play-dam as industriously as his father and mother were working on the big dam, and Baree would lie flat on his belly a few feet away, watching him and wondering mightily. He could see some reason for nibbling at sticks—he liked to sharpen his teeth on sticks himself; but it puzzled him to explain why Umisk so painstakingly stripped the bark from the sticks and swallowed it.

Another method of play still further discouraged Baree's advances. A short distance from the spot where he had first seen Umisk there was a shelving bank that rose ten or twelve feet from the water, and this bank was used by the young beavers as a slide. It was worn smooth and hard. Umisk would climb up the bank at a point where it was not so steep. At the top of the slide he would put his tail out flat behind him and give himself a shove, shooting down the toboggan and landing in the water with a big splash.

One afternoon, when the toboggan was particularly wet and slippery from recent use, Baree went up the beaver-path to the top of the bank, and began investigating. Nowhere had he found the beaver-smell so strong as on the slide. He began sniffing and incautiously went too far. In an instant his feet shot out from under him, and with a single wild yelp he went shooting down the toboggan. For the second time in his life he found himself struggling under water, and when a minute or two later he dragged himself up through the soft mud to the firmer footing of the shore, he had at last a very well-defined opinion of beaver play.

Baree's stay with the beaver shows that at bottom he is more dog than wolf, and so fitted for human companionship.

Marc Antony

MARC ANTONY—hero and buffoon; true lover and faithless husband; great general and greater mountebank; orator, statesman, voluptuary and trifle—threw away the world for love. He was the hero of the most stirring real-life romance in history. He might have been a second Julius Caesar or even Alexander. He preferred to be the helpless adorer of the Egyptian queen, Cleopatra.

As a mere lad, Antony served with distinction in Rome's Syrian and Egyptian wars, and later in Gaul under Caesar, whose lifelong friend he became. When Pompey made the senate order Caesar to disarm, Antony, as tribune of the people, vetoed the bill and then fled to Caesar's camp disguised as a slave, pretending his life was in danger for his loyalty. He fought valiantly in the Gallic wars and deserves much credit for Rome's victories. As reward, when Caesar became dictator, Antony was made second in command and appointed governor of all Italy.

In his latter capacity he launched on a course of wild dissipation that set Rome aghast. The orator Cicero thundered invectives against him, and he was regarded as a hopeless failure in life. Yet at the call to arms he was at once in the field, aiding Caesar against Pompey and winning battle after battle. His soldiers worshiped him. He joked with them around the camp-fire, got royally drunk with them—was, in fact, their boon companion.

When Caesar was assassinated the conspirators had planned to rule Rome and had persuaded the people to justify their murderous act. But Antony, by a fiery and brilliant oration over Caesar's body, so aroused the popular mind against them that the murderers were compelled to flee for their lives. Then, summoning Caesar's nephew and adopted son, Octavius, Antony raised an army and marched to punish the chief conspirators, Brutus and Cassius. In two successive battles, while Octavius lay idly in his tent, Antony completely crushed the conspirators and avenged his friend's murder. He, incidentally, made himself virtual ruler of the earth, with Octavius as his colleague.

The two divided the world between them, Antony choosing the eastern half and leaving Octavius the western.

Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, was suspected of having sided with the conspirators. Antony resolved to bring her to trial for treason, as Egypt was practically subject to Rome.

Cleopatra was one of the rare women who have arisen at various periods in history to overthrow empires, leave behind them a world full of trouble and disaster and to wreck the careers of the greatest men. As a girl she had met Caesar, won his love and induced him to reseat her on the throne of Egypt, whence a family quarrel had forced her. She had even, for love of Caesar, poisoned her husband, Ptolemy.

She now tried similar tactics on Antony. At first sight of her beauty the man who had come thither as her judge became her slave. For her sake he cast away dreams of empire and let his glorious deeds of the past sink out of memory. In Alexandria the two set up a monarchy of luxury, dissipation and extravagance that became the scandal of the civilized world.

For reasons of state, Antony had married Octavia, the sister of his colleague, Octavius. She was his fourth wife. He now divorced her for Cleopatra, thus mortally offending Octavius. The latter had been busy making the most of Antony's mad infatuation to forward his own career. Cold, crafty, heartless, he had steadily undermined Antony's influence at Rome and had so strengthened himself there that a few years later he was able to declare himself emperor, under the title of Augustus. Antony had put an end to republican Rome by defeating the conspirators. Octavius reaped the fruits of his former friend's labors.

Octavius decided to get rid of Antony forever. To this end he made war on Cleopatra. Antony espoused her cause, and the two rival powers met in a great sea fight near Actium. Here Antony's genius again flashed up. He was rapidly winning the battle, when, from sudden caprice, Cleopatra ordered her galley rowed away from the scene. Antony, thinking her wounded, forgot all about the battle and followed her. Deprived thus of its leader, his whole fleet fled. For a while in subsequent warfare he held his own against Octavius. But the sun of his success was set. Cleopatra sent secret messages of submission to Octavius, who replied by telling her that the murder of Antony would be the most acceptable proof of her surrender. She accordingly had word sent to Antony that she was dead.

Broken-hearted, the lover did not wait to verify the tale, but fell upon his sword, dying for the false woman whose lures had made him throw away a world. Cleopatra, finding that the cold Octavius' heart could not be won as Caesar's and Antony's had been, and learning that she was to go to Rome as a prisoner, forced a poisonous snake to bite her and died. Marc Antony killed himself in 30 B. C. at the age of fifty-three, having in that time run the gamut of every human experience and achievement.

NewsCAREFULLY GRADE
MARKET PEACHES

In years of a heavy crop it is hard to sell peaches unless they are carefully graded. J. W. Lloyd, in charge of fruit and vegetable marketing investigations at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, points out in the directions which he gives for the grading and packing of peaches. When supplies are abundant, the market becomes very discriminating and is likely to ignore all peaches not meeting its fancy, he explained. Uniformly large peaches, free from blemishes, may sell very well, while small or slightly blemished peaches go begging on the same market, he added.

"Not all peaches suitable for shipment are uniform enough in size, color and freedom from blemishes to sell to the best advantage if packed together. Certain classes of trade call for extra-fine table peaches, and such peaches command a premium over the less highly finished product, although the latter may be well suited to canning and other uses. The more nearly uniform the peaches in a given lot, the better they will sell. Often the second grade, packed alone, will sell nearly as well as a mixture of first and second grades. And the first grade sells very much better by itself than if even a few inferior specimens are included in the package."

"Three factors must be considered in the grading of peaches: maturity, blemishes and size. In case a fancy pack is to be made, color also is concerned. If peaches are picked too green, they must be culled; if so ripe as to be easily bruised in handling, they are unsuitable for shipment but may be sold locally for immediate use. With reference to blemishes and size, if each grower grades according to his own ideas without regard to what others are doing, many variations in grades will result, and each lot of peaches must be seen by the buyer before a sale can be made. On the other hand, if all growers graded according to some definite, recognized standard, it would be possible to make sales by wire without personal inspection by the purchaser. This would greatly facilitate the handling of a large crop. Growers therefore will find it to their advantage to pack according to the United States grades for peaches. These grades are well known in the trade and have been adopted as official for Illinois. Small quantities of peaches may be graded by hand, but for large volumes of fruit a mechanical grader should be used."

"Although the four-basket tomato flat formerly was used for packing Illinois peaches and the six-basket carrier has occasionally been used, the standard package at the present time is the bushel basket. Special types of bushel packages are used to a slight extent, but for the most part the regular form of standard bushel basket is employed. This year a new package built like an egg case with a separate compartment for each peach, is being tried in an experimental way for the handling of fancy table peaches that have been allowed to remain on the tree until they have developed full flavor and are too ripe for safe handling by ordinary methods. "No matter what method of packing is used, the work will be greatly simplified by convenient arrangement of the packing shed."

"Extreme care should be exercised in handling the peaches all the way from the trees to the refrigerator car. In order to avoid bruising or otherwise injuring them."

"When the peach crop is large, only the better grades should be sent to the city market. The No. 3, or cull, grade should never be packed for shipment. The small peaches and No. 2 grade should be sold locally. If the packing shed is located near a hard road, a large quantity of peaches may be sold to persons coming in autos or auto trucks."

Horticultural Notes

Apple trees are subject to 66 diseases.

Fruit trees should be either cultivated or mulched with straw or like material.

Spray the ornamental shrubs and trees each time before the sprayer is put away.

Some one has recently said that two hours of each day's work on the farm, garden and orchard go to feed the insects.

Arsenate of lead and black leaf 40 are two materials which, when properly applied, will control nine-tenths of the bugs that cause trouble in the home garden.

Plan to spray every year and as often as necessary. Since spraying is the most important orchard practice, it cannot be neglected. More growers fail on account of a lack of spraying or proper spraying than perhaps on account of any other practice.

It will always pay to grow high-quality fruit and the orchards which are most profitable are generally the ones which produce high yields. High quality and high yields generally go hand in hand.

City Water From Glacier

The city of Boulder, Colo., has taken steps to purchase from the United States government the land occupied by the Arapahoe glacier, distant about fifteen miles from the city, with the object of supplementing the city's water supply from the melting ice. According to the weather bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture, this is the first instance of a town or city in this country deriving a part of its water supply from a glacier.

Reckless Questioning

Attorney J. Lyman Gray was questioning Dr. E. A. Gates during a trial in Superior court relative to the time that he visited a patient, and the physician said he believed the date was December 25.

"Was it on Christmas day?" the attorney asked.

"It was December 25, as I recall it," the physician said.

"December 25 is usually Christmas, isn't it?" the lawyer asked.

"That is a reckless question, isn't it, Mr. Gray?" Judge Christopher T. Callahan asked with a twinkling of the eye.—Springfield Union.

Interesting People of Palos

Palos is the home of a number of individuals who are filling a large and in many cases, unique service in the world. So far they have hidden their lights under a bushel basket, and are comparative strangers to their neighbors. Our community life in Palos will be richer if we know something more of our interesting citizens. This first sketch tells something of a man who is this year president of the Palos Improvement Club.

PROF. MARTIN SPRENGLING

He refers to himself jokingly at times as "the tramp professor"—but before two words have left his mouth the stranger realizes that behind this keen-eyed, tall muscular slender man lie years of study and thot. And on looking up Martin Sprengling in "Who's Who" you will find that he has taken his Bachelor of Arts degree from Northwestern College, Wisconsin; that he has graduated from the Lutheran Seminary, that he has studied at Harvard, and won his Doctorate at the University of Chicago. Also you learn that he is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, and that at present he is professor of Arabic Language and Literature at the University of Chicago. When on further acquaintance you learn that he can speak besides English; French, Italian, German, Arabic, Old Greek, New Greek, Persian, Hebrew, Syriac, Russian and Turkish and knows the alphabets of twenty-two languages, you open your eyes and wonder "what great man is this we are harboring in our midst?"

Returning to "Who's Who", we find that Martin Sprengling was born in Centre, Outagamie County, Wisconsin, October 7, 1877. While studying at Northwestern College and later in the Lutheran Seminary, he became interested in Oriental languages and literature, and during the seven years when he served as Minister of the Gospel—he continued his studies. In 1910—11 he taught the Classics at Northwestern College, 1911—15, he served as instructor of Semitic languages at Harvard, and from 1915 on, he has held the chair of Arabic Language and Literature at the University of Chicago.

In 1912 while aboard a steamship bound for England, Mr. Sprengling was attracted by a petite, black-eyed, black-haired young lady with an intriguing foreign accent. This young lady, Mary Christina Schmidt by name was returning to Germany to visit her people there. She had made her home for a number of years in Cambridge, Massachusetts with her brother, an instructor in Harvard University. She very properly refused to give Mr. Sprengling her address, but "where there's a will there's a way", and somehow he obtained it and followed her to Germany. Here they became engaged. In 1914 when the war broke out Mr. Sprengling was in Constantinople and Miss Schmidt was visiting in Germany. Alarmed by reports of war conditions and tales of the massacring of women and children by the Russians, Mr. Sprengling immediately started for Germany to rescue his fiancée. But starting and getting there were two different things. Soldiers and war supplies filled all available boats to capacity, so that he succeeded in reaching Germany only after many weeks of travel and a circuitous route of some thousands of miles. Reaching Kolberg, he found his fiancée safe, and here they were married. Now, Mr. and Mrs. Sprengling and their four children, two boys and two girls, make Palos Park their home.

This summer Dr. Sprengling is traveling through Europe and Asia collecting manuscripts of old folk tales. His work for the next ten to twenty years is the preparation of a complete new edition of the "Kalevala" and "Dinna". The "Kalevala" is a group of folk tales and stories supposed to have originated at the behest of an Eastern monarch, whose son the Prince, was very lazy at his studies. To educate the prince, stories and fables were collected and written by his tutors, which would teach him the desired lessons, interestingly and painlessly. These tales have since traveled from mouth to mouth over desert sands, and across wastes of Arctic Sea. They have made their way about the world by ship and by caravan and in traveling have been told in different details, but in essentials they have remained the same. The Uncle Remus Stories are an example of far traveled folk tales.

The significance of folk tales lies not in their content, but in the facts which they tell concerning the life and customs of a people. They speak more truly than any recording historian. They tell also of times of which no authentic historical record had been kept, and they give information too regarding the migrations of peoples. To trace these tales and understand their significance, one must have a thorough understanding of the history of the countries, and peoples and languages where they are found. It is here that Dr. Sprengling functions. He knows the languages, history and customs.

Dr. Sprengling's task this summer consists of securing the manuscripts concerning these tales, either by buying them or if he cannot purchase them, by photographing them. Then on his return will come the enormous task of deciphering these documents. On his travels this summer, he expects to visit the following cities before he embarks at Southampton for home: Paris, Florence, Rome, Alexandria, Cairo, Jerusalem, Bayrout, Constantinople, Vienna, Munich, Giessen, Gotha, Tubingen, Berlin, Hamburg, London, Oxford.

Some of the students who study Arabic with him at the University are men preparing for missionary work. The preparation for the life of a missionary has changed radically the last few years. Religious leaders realize now that other religions than Christianity contain much that is beautiful and worthy of emulation. The theological student needs therefore to learn as much as he can of the religion, culture and language of the people among whom he will work. The missionary who is to work in Mohammedan lands needs to know Arabic and to have a knowledge of the Koran, the Mohammedan Bible. They obtain this information under the direction of Professor Sprengling.

One might perhaps believe that a man so steeped in the traditions and literature of the past would have little time and energy left for problems of the present. But such is not the case with Dr. Sprengling. He and Mrs. Sprengling have taken upon themselves the tutoring of their children in their early years not alone in the regular school subjects, but also in many branches not touched by the ordinary school. And there is no man in the village more keenly alive to the problems of present day Palos than Mr. Sprengling. As president of the Palos Improvement Club, he has been the leading spirit in the organization of the Boy Scout Troop and the Athletic Club. He has appointed and worked with a Citizenship Committee, whose members have studied and reported on the subjects of Good Roads, Sidewalks, Gas in Palos and Good Schools.

Professor Sprengling's interests make a unique pair indeed, the first an absorbing interest in the histories of the past; the second an even more absorbing interest in the making of Palos history of the present.

PALOS PARK

Miss Ruth Robertson has recently undergone a tonsilectomy. According to latest reports she is recovering rapidly.

Mr. and Mrs. Umlor are making a three or four weeks automobile trip to the Black Hills of South Dakota.

Miss Judith Strohm has returned after her California vacation.

Mr. and Mrs. Waldemar Thor-sell, who are planning to build a new home on Ridge Avenue this fall, have just completed their well, striking water at a depth of 163 feet.

The water strata under Palos seems to vary greatly in depth, wells having been reported all the way from ten to five hundred feet deep. When Mr. and Mrs. John Sippel had their well drilled at 450 feet there was still no water, then the well diggers struck a layer of solid granite. Under that they found blue shale. It would be interesting to make a list of the different well depths in Palos and then to get a geologist to explain to us what formations lie under us.

Misses Ruth and Harriet Pashley have visited Alaska on their western trip, going as far north as Skagway which is about 100 miles north of Juneau. So far they have set no date of their return.

Mr. and Mrs. MacLaren Christie and children are driving in their new car to southern Illinois where they will visit Mrs. Christie's folks, then they will cross over into Missouri, returning home by way of Springfield.

Mrs. Clyde Schultz's sedan and Mr. Flynn's truck reached the same spot at the same moment recently, with resultant minor injuries to the sedan and its occupants.

Mr. E. Primm in his Bon Ton Laundry truck ran so nearly into the ditch on 121st Street and 90th Ave., Monday that to prevent the machine overturning, it was necessary to rope the car to trees and then pull it out with a wrecking truck.

The Palos Woman's Club met Monday at the home of Mrs. Geo. B. Ward. Mrs. MacKenzie played a group of three selections on the violin, accompanied by Stephen Urbanowicz; then Mr. Urbanowicz played two piano solos.

The speaker of the day, Miss Elizabeth Haseltine, instructor in the Art Institute and the University of Chicago, and the winner of the Lorado Taft Travel Scholarship for 1926 gave a talk on the subject of Sculpture and some of the pieces of sculpture in the city of Chicago.

"We are ignorant", said Miss Haseltine "of the origin of sculpturing. The art going back to prehistoric times in all races." The work of a sculptor is usually finished in a time defying medium and lasts thru generations. It should therefore receive a great deal of thought as to the idea embodied and great care should be taken in the execution of the work.

The mechanical production of a piece of sculpturing is a long complicated process. First comes the original modeling, possibly in clay, and perhaps just an inch or two high, which expresses the artist's idea. Then he makes a model in more detail, possibly a foot high. If the idea is accepted by the powers that be, a large working model is made in clay, then follows a plaster cast, and finally from this plaster cast a marble cutter copies the sculptor's work in marble, or the work may be cast in bronze or less frequently cement. A considerable portion of the expense of a statue, approximately fifty per cent is consumed in the making of the foundation and setting up of the statue. Then out of the other fifty per cent the sculptor must pay the plaster caster, the bronze molder or the marble cutter, so that the sculptor himself nets but a small per cent of the entire amount paid for the statue.

The setting up of any piece of statuary is exceedingly important, many fine pieces of work being ruined by their settings. The Saint Gaudens Lincoln in Lincoln Park is a masterpiece of sculpturing in an appropriate setting. The statue of Goethe is miserably placed. The "Gold Lady" in Jackson Park, in her original architectural setting at the World's Fair was lovely, but in her present sylvan setting, looks distorted and out of place.

When the World's Fair Fine Arts Building—later the Field Museum, in Jackson Park is restored part of the building will be devoted to exhibitions of originals and copies of the world's finest sculpturing. Then Chicagoans will have the opportunity to study and enjoy more than is possible at the present time, the ancient art of Sculpture.

Following the talk, half a dozen of the Club women, dressed in smocks of different colors, served refreshments to the women present. The next meeting of the Woman's Club will be held at the home of Mrs. Paul Cornell, August nineteenth.

Practical Four-Room Plan for That "Castle in Spain"

FLAGSTONE terracing, iron grille balconies and a quaint wrought iron lantern give distinction to this little old-world one-story house. Rough plaster walls and a colorful tile roof make an attractive exterior that will find a welcome in any neighborhood.

But a carefully designed floor plan is its greatest appeal. One enters from the covered loggia directly into the large story and a half living-room, with its triple-arched windows reaching from the floor almost to the ceiling. The dining room alcove is conveniently located and well lighted. The kitchen has been deftly planned to give the housewife the greatest comfort and step-saving. Everything about the house has been planned to give the utmost in stability and real home comfort. The walls and ceilings are insulated throughout with celotex to cut down the coal bills in winter and keep the house cool in the summer. Who could wish for a more beautiful little home.

HOW LAND SWINDLERS AND LOAN SHARKS DEFRAUD THEIR PREY

W. R. Morehouse Reveals Further Schemes by Which Poor Widows Are Bereft of Their Savings—Unbelievable Frauds Are Worked on the Uninformed.

By W. R. MOREHOUSE,

Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association.

ARTICLE NO. III

LAND swindles are almost as common as sand on the seashore. Here is one. A widow was left alone in the world with but $6,000. She was urged to take a free ride into the country to look over a new town site. Just a pleasure ride, she was told. No obligation on her part. She accepted the invitation with no intention of parting with her precious $6,000, but she fell among high-pressure salesmen and in an unguarded moment she affixed her signature to a contract to purchase a vacant lot for the $6,000 cash she had in a savings bank.

Thirty days after she drew out her account for what she supposed was a business lot she received a notice that her monthly instalment of $6,000 was due, being a $1,000 payment on each of six $6,000 lots. Strange as it may seem, not until she received this notice did she read the contract she had signed. Instead of buying one $6,000 lot and paying for it, as she meant to do, she had signed a contract to buy six $6,000 business lots and the $6,000 she drew from the bank had been applied as a first payment of $1,000 each on the six lots.

Had she gone to her banker she would have saved herself the loss of her inheritance, but doubtless the reason she had not consulted her bank was because she was not aware that bankers render such a service.

this same shylock for assistance and this is how he handled the case. He led the woman to expect that he would lend her the money but kept deferring making the loan from day to day. Finally, on the day she must make her payment or lose her furniture, he

A Widow Fell Among High Pressure Land Salesmen

Sad is the lot of the savings depositor who, after losing his savings through wild-cat speculation, is driven to desperation for funds and finds it necessary to borrow money to meet an emergency such as sickness or unpaid rent. Let me give the facts about two cases of the many with which I have come in contact.

The Loan Shark at Work

The principal characters in the first case are a man, who must borrow $350 to place his wife in a hospital to save her life, and a loan shark, who demands every ounce of blood. In desperation the borrower applies to this loan shark for the loan of $350. This is what it costs him—the amount is almost unbelievable but I obtained the exact figures first hand and I can vouch for their correctness—this man was obliged to give his note for $925 for a loan of $350! The day he got the note the shark sold it to an innocent holder and it became an obligation binding upon the borrower. Think of paying $925 for a loan of $350!

Here is another. This time there is a woman in the case. The woman needed $165 to meet a payment on her furniture or lose it. She turned to Cleveland, Ohio.—"I have really had all kinds of trouble. After having my first baby, I lost weight, no matter what I did. Then a doctor told me I would be better if I had another baby, which I did. But I got worse, was always sickly and went down to 98 pounds. My neighbor told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I got a box and took it for a week, and I weighed 116 pounds. It has just done wonders for me and I can do my housework now without one bit of trouble."—Mrs. M. RIESINGER, 10004 Nelson Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

If some good fairy should appear and offer to grant your heart's desire, what would you choose?

Wealth? It's a transient thing that brings its own cares.

Happiness? It's an elusive thing which we keep by giving away.

Health? That's the best gift. Health is riches that gold cannot buy and surely health is cause enough for happiness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound may be the good fairy who offers you the priceless gift of better health.

TRAVEL AND OTHER WRAPS; BLACK FROCKS ARE POPULAR

NOW, when half the world is "a-traveling" or getting ready for vacations and outings, the shops are making exhibits of new coats in novel adaptations of current styles. These exhibits attract the rank and file of us with their many novelties, but sell us smart utility coats that will answer for all-round wear, including travel. However, one may indulge in a novelty or so without extravagance, since they are often moderately priced. There are many pretty tailored models in white flannel, sometimes with inlays on collar and cuffs of light colors. Flannels and kashmir in coral pink, light green and sand, topped by white lapin collars are cut in the straight-line fashion, varied by capes and cape backs and having narrow stitched belts of the fabric.

Capes of all lengths are used on land or sail the seas in ships. Then there are long, soft enveloping capes of tweed that look equal to all emergencies of travel whether by train, motor, ship or airplane. Some of these are in the novelty weaves of tweed and ombre shadings and many coats have raglan sleeves.

However flattering the colorful, cool and dainty frocks, popular for present wear in the afternoon or evening, they cannot eclipse the all-black or black-and-white dresses that make their annual appearance in mid-summer and are with us once again. There is always a place in the wardrobe, summer or winter, for the black dress, but its unique smartness makes a stronger impression in summer among so many colorful rivals that serve to set it off.

Among the styles presented for after-coats of the lighter materials—like flat crepe—and monkey fur contributes a fringe to many of them.

A very attractive coat is fashioned of black and white halftone stripes, with a short cape at the back. Bands of the material, with stripes running crosswise, serve for trimming the coat and edging the cape, in which the stripes are vertical. Black and white are promoted in coats of black taffeta lined with white kashmir. Facings of kashmir down the front are edged with looped fringe of wool yarn.

Two good coats for general wear lay no claim to novelty but invite attention to good style and appropriateness. The coat at the left of the picture is intricately cut and faultlessly tailored with no trimming except large buttons on the sleeves. It has a collar of summer fur. The coat at the right is a little more elaborate, showing pipings of satin and featuring large pockets and flaring sleeves. Coats of this kind are usually made in the afternoon there are some attractive crepe de chine models with rippling skirts, apron draperies and long loose sleeves. Others, especially designed for the larger women, follow the straight-line silhouette, introducing groups of inverted plaits in the skirts and a belted and slightly bloused waistline. Vestees, jabots and collars in white, or showing touches of white, are liked in these models and occasionally a black frock reveals white pipings. A pretty new sleeve for midsummer is tight fitting above the elbow, but is split and falls away from the arm below it. In frocks of georgette this same type of sleeve has graduated ruffles attached at the elbows corresponding with circular flounces on the skirt. Black georgette crepe with polka dots in white is a charming medium for black-and-white frocks with white lingerie gilet, collar or vestee in white. For evening black chiffon appears in low-necked sleeveless gowns that have full of a twill in tan, navy, beige or light brown shades. Whatever the style or material used, coats in present exhibits emphasize the slender silhouette and depart very little from straight lines.

Light-weight tweed coats, in tan or gray mixtures, innocent of trimming, except for a button or so on sleeves and pockets, are great favorites with persistent travelers and are just as appropriate for sports wear as for journeys. Tweed in two tones—as beige and tan—with half-length cape at the back is a variety of travel coat that pleases those who motor overskirts, long-bloused bodices and wide, crushed girdles, of the material. Sometimes they have floating panels.

A perennial favorite returns in simple gowns of black satin, some of them sleeveless, like those shown in the picture. These are tailored types, but, being sleeveless, they are very adaptable and will see one through a summer afternoon and evening. The frock at the left has a bloused bodice and long shoulder. Fine embroidered batiste, in collars or trimming touches, as shown in the gown at the right, is a charming finish for the black satin afternoon frock. But the neck treatment may be changed for evening wear. A tulle scarf, a flower on the shoulder or a bit of jewelry may do the trick and convert a day frock into evening dress. This is one good reason for the appeal of black satin.

Lesson for August 8 THE GIVING OF MANNA

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 16:1-36.
GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus said unto them, "I am the bread of life."

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Gift of Daily Bread.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God Sends Food in the Wilderness.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Our Daily Blessings.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God's Good Gifts.

1. Lusting for the Feshpots of Egypt (vv. 1-12).

1. Murmuring against Moses and Aaron (vv. 1-3).

As they journeyed from Elim into the great wilderness, they became conscious of the scarcity of some of the things they had enjoyed even in Egyptian slavery. Only a few days before they were singing God's praises for their wondrous deliverance at the Red Sea (Ex. 15). Their complaint not only displayed ingratitude but a deep-seated impiety. It was against God that they were murmuring, for He had led them into the wilderness. His object in so doing was to teach them to walk by faith instead of sight. They went so far as to express the wish that they had died in Egypt with full stomachs rather than to be walking in the wilderness by faith.

2. God's answer to their murmurings (vv. 4-12).

(1) He promised to rain bread from heaven (vv. 4, 5).

His purpose in this was to teach them that man liveth not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord (Deut. 8:3).

(2) He promised to give them a vision of His glory (vv. 6-10).

This served as a warning and encouragement. Moses and Aaron told the children of Israel that the glory of the Lord should be seen in the morning as a reminder that their murmuring was against the Lord and not against themselves.

(3) He promised them flesh and bread (vv. 11, 12).

"At even ye shall eat flesh and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread."

11. Quails and Manna Given (vv. 13-15).

At the appointed time God gave the Israelites the promised food. He first allowed them to feel their need to show them that man's highest need is not physical food, but living faith and fellowship with God.

1. In the evening the quails came up (v. 13).

Since they desired flesh, He gave them flesh to eat. God frequently caters to the desires of His people, knowing that the best way to teach them is to allow them to be filled with their own folly.

2. In the morning God gave the manna (vv. 14, 15).

The Israelites did not know what it was. They therefore exclaimed, What is it? Moses told them that it was the bread which the Lord had given them to eat.

III. The Responsibilities of the Israelites (vv. 16-31).

1. They must gather a certain rate daily (v. 16).

The purpose of this was to test their faith. They must look to Him for their daily bread (Matt. 6:11).

2. Every man must gather for himself (v. 16).

This teaches us the important lesson that every man must appropriate Christ for himself.

3. They must not gather in excess of one day's supply (vv. 18-20).

That which was in excess of a day's supply became corrupt. The Christian must use what gifts the Father bestows upon him. Christian grace and Bible truth must not be hoarded up—they are good only when put to use.

4. The manna must be gathered fresh every morning (v. 21).

This was to be done early before the sun was up. So must we seek Christ, who is our manna, every day and the first thing in the day (John 6:57).

5. The manna must be eaten to preserve life.

They were in a wilderness, so could live only by the eating of the food which God gave. It is so with Christ (John 6:53).

6. Due consideration should be given to the Sabbath day (vv. 22-31).

A double portion was to be gathered the day before so as to keep inviolate the Sabbath day.

IV. Manna Kept as a Memorial (vv. 32-36).

This was to be kept as a reminder of God's favor in feeding them in the wilderness, even for supplying them with bread for forty years until they reached the promised land.

The new washing principle of the ROTAREX new type, aluminum cylinder washes clothes clean with out wear. This remarkable new development in the art of laundering combines first, the suction action of vacuum washers; second, the effect of the rocker motion that prevents winding of the clothes, and third, the alternate lifting and dousing that reproduces perfectly the hand method of washing with out rubbing recommended by every maker of fine fabrics.

In the big, ten pound aluminum ROTAREX cylinder the clothes glide without friction over a glassy surface that is free from perforations. The cleansing suds are suctioned into the self-reversing, revolving cylinder through numerous holes in its two ENDS or HEADS. It is the only washer made that does not wash back into the clothes the same dirt that is washed out of them.

A TRIBUTE TO THE PANSY

By John Parrott,
Only a beautiful little flower,
That once in a while does bloom.
It scents the air all around
And sends out sweet perfume.

And when the little flower
Had passed away, it was a sad regret,
I long to see that little flower
Again, I never can forget.

That little flower that once did bloom

And raised with tender care,
Its fragrance was most beautiful
And scented all the air.

FOLLOWS EMANCIPATOR

Milton R. Moskow, twelve-year-old San Francisco schoolboy who since the age of five has patterned his life after that of Abraham Lincoln, aspires to occupy the White House some day as his hero did. He has been nominated as a candidate for the American Youth Award established by the directors of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, held in Philadelphia from June 1 to December 1 in celebration of 150 years of American independence. Under the plan of the American Youth Award and the American Teacher Award, each state will select a boy and a girl and a woman teacher who best represent American ideals, and they will be given trips to Philadelphia and to Washington, where they will receive medals from President Coolidge.
